Caret talks to city council

By Marcus Walton
Spartan Daily Staff Writer

The attempt to save money on campus doesn't necessarily mean programs will be eliminated, SJSU president Robert Caret told the San Jose City Council Tuesday afternoon.

Some programs will actually be enhanced, he said, but there will need to be modifications.

"Elimination is not the necessary outcome," Caret said. "We'd like to pick 10 to 20 programs on campus that are known, regionally or nationally, to enhance so if a student wants to major in it, they think of SJSU."

Caret said he was addressing the council because of concerns about program cuts and to give them an update on the university's academic priorities.

Caret told the council members that despite wide concerns about programs being cut lobbying to save departments is premature.

"The reason I am not trying to get discussion on this is because we haven't had all the dialogue yet,"

Caret said. "When we are finished then we will have the normal dialogue."

One of the solutions Caret said is being looked at is merging of programs and moving departments between colleges and finding a way to make the university more responsive to the needs of local industry.

"I have three different environment programs in three different colleges and none of them provide what the valley needs," Caret said.

Those programs may be merged and the course of

The accident was cleared and the streets reopened.

Peace Corps seeks volunteers

By Sona Sharma
Spartan Daily Staff Writer

For anyone keen on experiencing different cultures or concerned about hunger, disease and illiteracy all over the world, they should check out the Peace Corps.

Peace Corps recruiter, May Ng, hosted a short film show and an informal talk about the organization on Tuesday.

"Peace Corps was started in 1961 by John F. Kennedy and now we have just celebrated our 25th anniversary," May said. "I think he had a vision of Americans helping other countries. So far 140,000 people have served the Peace Corps and right now we have over 7,000 volunteers."

These volunteers work in over 90 countries in Africa, Asia, the Pacific, Central and South America, the Caribbean, the Middle East, Central and Eastern Europe and the former Soviet Union.

"I don't know a thing about it," said Jennifer Miller, a student of art education.

"I lived in a hut with a thatched roof with a family there. They welcomed me and made me a part of their home."

Miller was one of six students who attended the talk. She and the others were looking for more information about the corps.

"I have been taking anthropology classes right now. I also like to travel because in traveling you learn about other cultures, so I thought maybe I would like to do this."

Wendy Papa, a student at West Valley college said she wanted to know more about what people do as volunteers and said she thought "maybe I can do something meaningful in my life."

Michele Young, a SJSU graduate student in environmental science, was a volunteer from 1986 to 1991.

"I lived in a small village in Botswana, a country in Southern Africa for three years and I taught agriculture in a secondary school," Young said. "I lived in a hut with a thatched roof with a family there. They welcomed me and made me a part of their home."

Ng said, "We usually prefer people who apply to have a bachelors degree unless you have a trade skill that you can offer, like business skills. These do not need any specific degree, a general degree will do as long as you have experience in that field."

She also said most of the countries they work in are developing and because of this they get a real hands on experience. "You just get to go out and be a self-starter."

Every volunteer is assigned to an agency to work with and is paid a monthly allowance to cover the basic cost of living in a particular country. But, before this happens, people wanting to become volunteers have to fill out an 18-page-long application form. They are then interviewed for their maturity level and skills before being told where they will be working.

The volunteers then go through a three-month training period in the country they are assigned. During this period they are taught the native language and other important details specific to their assignment.

Ng said, "working for Peace Corps is not a contract. It is a two-year commitment for the toughest job that you really love and want to do." Anyone interested in getting more information or an application form can call the toll free number 1-800-424-8580.

Books and posters:
all at the library saleBy Ivan F. Bergman
Spartan Daily Staff Writer

Finally, the perfect apartment is yours, and all of your furniture is moved in. Sitting in your room, you look around and notice something is wrong: The walls are bare, and the paint on them is not too appealing.

What to do? The solution may be the used book sale in the atrium of Clark Library.

People are buying "mostly the posters," said Amanda Walker, an SJSU freshman staffing the book sale. Posters, used books, magazines, vinyl records and cassettes are being sold.

The library gets large donations from corporations and alumni, said Lucy Yonemura, head of library acquisitions.

The books to be sold are culled from these donations.

Usually a larger book sale takes place in Wahlquist Library North, room 408. This semester, because of many donations and scheduling and staffing problems, the sale won't begin until Oct. 1. Yonemura is hoping some of the staffing problems will be ameliorated with help from emeritus professors. So far staffing has mostly come from off campus.

"We've been very pleased with sales in the Clark lobby," said Yonemura. She also said, sales have been $150-$250 a day.

The book sale in the Clark Library atrium takes place Tuesday and Wednesday, from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. When the Wahlquist location opens Oct. 1, it will have the same hours.

Scam artists are everywhere America: Land of the gullible

By John Louis

This country is being inundated with scams, from the baby-faced boy selling $5 candy bars at the post office to the soft-spoken man with a gas can begging for money. These scams range from the not-so-obvious to the well-executed and obvious ones.

Two months ago, a boy approached me while I was going to the main post office in San Jose. He gave me the regular sales pitch.

"Sir," he said, "I am with Teen Leaders of California. I am raising money to get kids off drugs. Can you buy a candy bar from me?"

Of course, one would have to be either uncompassionate or journalistic not to fall for his well-rehearsed pitch. However, my journalistic mindset got the best of me. I decided to inquire about the organization he had purported to represent.

"Where is your organization? Is it local or what?" I asked him.

"Here is our address," he said politely, pulling out a laminated flyer with a name, address and phone number.

I jotted down the name of the organization, the address and phone number on a piece of paper. I asked him whether I could go and talk to the director of his group.

"Sure, you could go," the boy said without hesitation.

I walked back to my car and drove off to see whether the organization had an office in town. And, it did not.

On a scam of a different ilk, let me share two other incidents.

About a year ago, I was going shopping at Pak 'n Save when a soft-spoken man approached me with a gas can in his hand.

"Sir," he said, "I ran out of gas and my wife is freezing," pointing to his car. I looked over and saw the parked car with the hood up about two blocks away. I walked over to the car. There was a lady in the car shivering. I went by and introduced myself.

"Let's go to the gas station," I said. Convinced the man was in need, I walked to the nearest gas station, bought him 2 1/2 gallons of unleaded gas, and gave $5 to boot. He thanked me and walked away graciously. A week later I saw him in the same car pulling a similar trick on someone else across the street.

About a year ago, I was driving southbound on 10th and San Carlos streets, when a lady in her mid-20s stuck her thumb out as if she was hitchhiking. I pulled over to the side of the street, and she hopped into my car. I asked her where she was going.

"I have locked my keys in my apartment. I want to go to my brother-in-law's house near Almaden Expressway to get some money to pay the locksmith to make me another key."

I gave her a ride to her destination. When she got there, she went inside a house and talked to a man, whom she claimed was her brother-in-law. She came out with him, and she told me the man did not have any money to lend her. "Let's go," she said.

She hopped back in my car, and I took off. I asked her where did she want me to take her this time. "I called the locksmith and made an appointment," she said. "Take me to First Street so I can take him to my house to make me another key."

When we got to First Street, there was indeed a locksmith on the corner of First and Second streets. When she knocked on the door, the place was closed. She went to a nearby telephone and made a call.

I asked her whether she wanted me to leave now. "Oh, no," she replied, "I want you to take me to my apartment. The locksmith is going to meet me there. Go this way," she said pointing toward 13th Street.

"Would you like to make an extra 20 bucks?" she asked me.

I hesitated at first. Then I asked her how would I make an extra $20? She told me to give her 20 bucks to pay the locksmith and once he makes her the key, then she will pay me my $20 back and give me an extra $20 for my trouble. I told her that I have been taken before, and that I could smell a skunk when I saw one.

Whether it's a baby-faced boy, the soft-spoken man with the gas can, or the conniving key lady, America has always been the hotbed of scams.

Before playing Good Samaritan, one must be selective these days. When in doubt, the rule is caveat emptor — that is, buyer beware.

By the way, the baby-faced boy's scam was not so obvious. The soft-spoken man with the gas can, his scam was well-executed. As for the key lady, hers was an obvious scam.

'Tom and Jerry,' 'Scooby Doo' ... what happened to the cool toons?

Cartoons suck! They suck, suck, suck, suck ... and suck some more! The cartoons of today are the worst wastes of animation cells to have hit the tube in many a year.

Yes, I am angry! I am pissed! I want to blow chunks!

The mindless and politically correct drivel kids have to watch these days turns their feeble little brains into mush. It doesn't make them laugh anymore or take them to another world.

No ... they just suck!

I remember the good old days when cartoons were a higher art form that turned the family room into a religious mecca for kids on Saturday mornings. A tear comes to my eye when I think of those hazy Saturday morning memories of years long past.

A long time ago in a family room far, far away ...

A little boy sits transfixed in front of a television screen, technicolor images reflected off his face, his eyes filled with wonder. A big grin fills his face ... he is having fun, lost in his own little world.

When I was kid we had all sorts of really cool brain candy. There was so much good stuff, it was hard to choose which one to watch. The world was an optimistically violent and mad place and all the kids revelled in it with delight.

Tom and Jerry, as far as I was concerned when I was little, could not be beat. Just watching them smack the crap out of each other made my day before I had to go to school on weekdays. I loved it when Tom got impaled by some sharp object and then when he drank a glass of water, it came pouring out of him in a dozen places. And Jerry, that little twerp, just made me smile whenever Tom smashed him with a pan, flattening him like a pancake. Their rampant chaos and destruction made me laugh and wince at the same time, and I loved it.

I loved it when Tom got impaled by some sharp object and then when he drank a glass of water, it came pouring out of him in a dozen places.

Let's not forget the Looney Tunes cartoons with Bugs Bunny and Daffy Duck, along with the poor, doomed to never win Elmer Fudd. How many times did Elmer take a lethal shotgun blast from his own gun to the head and only come out with a blackened face? How many times did Elmer fall for Bugs dressed like a woman only to end up with, you guessed it, a shotgun blast to the face? Yep, we liked poor old Elmer.

And just so you do not think I only liked the violent and sadistic cartoons, I also thought the Smurfs were kinda cool. I mean, the logic of it all was astounding. A couple hundred male Smurfs and only one chick, Smurfette. They all wanted her, heck she was the only chick. Doc, Hefly, Grumpy, Happy, Brainy Smurf ... they all wanted her. Except, of course, Vanity Smurf, because he wanted Hefly Smurf!

There was Scooby-Doo and the gang, always debunking the ghost stories, before Mulder and Scully had ever heard of the X-Files. In fact, their case record successes makes Mulder and Scully look like idiots. I remember Fred, Daphne, Theelma and the always stoned Shaggy. They had their van, The Mystery Machine, and went all over the country in search of a good mystery. And when the going got tough, all they had to do was give Scooby his Scooby Snacks and butts were going to get kicked.

So many awesome cartoons were out there. "Battle of the Planets," "Thunder in the Barabarians," "Spider-Man and his Amazing Friends," the "Superfriends," "G.I. Joe," "Transformers," "Voltron" and many others made my days.

But, the greatest, the absolute greatest one of all, was Robotech. It was the best English translation of those Japanese manga cartoons at the time. The storyline, about aliens invading earth, puts Independence Day to shame. The battles with thousands of earth and alien ships made the ones in Independence Day look like a brief skirmish.

Politically correct cartoon characters who are always nice to one another and learn a moral lesson every day. They have those Power Rangers geeks who are nothing more than bimbos who can talk. They don't even fight, all the fighting stuff is from old stock Japanese footage. Sheesh, what a ripoff!

And I haven't even gotten to Barney ... and I won't, at least not in this column.

For those of you who miss the good cartoons, check out USA, TNT and the Sci-Fi channels on cable late at night. It'll bring back those old memories and make you smile.

Who knows, maybe you'll feel like a kid again.

Everybody wants marriage, except the person getting married

Life goes on after college, or does it slam into a wall?

By Christine Ann Bacas

All my girlfriends are in a search for Mr. Right. Now that we are in the midst of our last semester, they feel the need to either find a man to marry or drop blatant hints to long-time boyfriends.

Lately, I have been feeling pressure from my family. My mom calls every two weeks to ask about my career prospects and to remind me that she may not have many years left on this Earth. Therefore, I should get married right after graduation so she can see her grandchildren before it's too late.

Some of my friends have already gotten married. Right after graduation, they got a job, got hitched and had children. That's what life is all about, right?

When college life is over, there will no longer be wild weekend parties, lazy nights hanging out and contemplating life, or cutting corners at a dreary part time job.

While family life may be the ideal, a lifestyle people work their whole lives to create, the thought makes me queasy. Perhaps it is just the after-effects of getting out of a four-year relationship. Or maybe it's just that I see too many opportunities for people my age to learn and grow from, without a significant other.

A girlfriend of mine, who is 22, got married last year after graduation and is more experiences you gain on your own before marriage and children, the better the parent and spouse you become.

expecting her first child in a few months. She said getting married and getting pregnant has made her more responsible and taught her to appreciate life more. I am happy for her newfound bliss and outlook on life, but I can't help but wonder what could have been had she waited. The

I hope, contrary to what I have seen, graduation does not mean the last stop before marriage and family life. When I tell my friends and family that I do not want to get married until I have established a career, dated diverse men from different backgrounds and traveled to my heart's desire, they look at me as if I am stoned.

It is unbelievable that the concept of being an "old maid" still exists.

Another girlfriend berated me for letting "a great man" get away. She looked at me sternly when I explained the reasons for the breakup.

Instead of agreeing with my decision to get out of a relationship where I was unhappy and felt smothered, she said incredulously, "But you're 22 and about to graduate. You'll never be able to marry a guy who has a degree and makes as much money as he does!"

Well, gee, I never looked at it that way. I always thought I went to school to educate myself so I could eventually establish a respectable career, making my own money.

As much as I respect the concept of marriage and family life, I refuse to succumb to society's expectations. I am very grateful my husband-hungry friends, reluctantly, accept my decision. Now all I need to do is convince my mom to postpone the wedding invitations.

Eastwood settles

BURBANK (AP) — Clint Eastwood and ex-lover Sandra Locke settled their bitter fight Tuesday over a film deal she had with Warner Bros. The terms were not disclosed. The settlement came while a jury was deliberating.

Locke, 49, had filed a $2 million fraud and contractual interference suit against Eastwood, claiming he set up a three-film deal to trick the actress director into dropping her 1989 paternity suit against him.

Locke never got to direct a film under the deal. She said she proposed 30 projects and all were rejected.

Eastwood's lawyer, Ray Fisher, said the actor had nothing to do with the studio's decisions. Eastwood testified that he agreed to pay the studio $1.25 million for the deal.

Eastwood and Locke met in 1975 while making "The Outlaw Josey Wales." They began living together in 1976, while Eastwood was still married.

Spartans spank #9 Berkeley

Bears go home with their tails between legsBy Yuki Wedemeyer
Spartan Daily Staff Writer

"We deserved the shutout," Coach Gary St. Clair of the men's soccer team said after the Spartans ended the California Golden Bears four-game winning streak Tuesday night. Cal is ranked ninth in the nation, coming off victories over No. 10 UCLA in overtime, and No. 16 Santa Clara University, last week.

"Brandon Main (SJSU goal keeper) made two critical saves, one early in the first half and one in the second, that completely deflated Cal," St. Clair said.

The Spartans looked like a new team, controlling the game at all points and working together to beat the Bears 4-2, but a few moments of uncertainty came when the Bears scored two goals in 39 seconds in the second half.

"We let down mentally, thinking it was already over," said C.J. Brown, SJSU senior defender. "I knew they couldn't come back after four goals. Their two goals were lucky as it was."

The Spartans have been working on being more physical, not letting teams dominate them physically as they did early in the season, St. Clair said.

"The result was their big star Brandon Moggio, completely frustrated all game long," St. Clair said.

"The team has been concentrating on being positive with each other, working more together, playing harder with each other, instead of bickering at each other all the time," said Justin Smith, who had an SJSU assist. "We had a team meeting, and we said, 'Let's just concentrate on being positive for a while,' and it has come out in the last two games."

Since the last home game in the SJSU Classic, the Spartans have found that teamwork works and that beating Cal feels good.

"At the beginning of the season, we were individuals. Now we're a unit," Brown said. "The last few years Cal has always been the one to knock us out. They were on a streak, and this was the perfect time to beat them."

SJSU defender C.J. Brown strips the ball from a Cal attacker. The Spartans allowed only two goals from the potent ninth ranked California Bears team. The Bears were never close during the match, in which SJSU won, 4-2.

"We get ahead four to nothing, and then (Cal) starts coming back. It's a very emotional game. It's not for the faint-hearted out here, I'll tell you."

yards out on a pass from Jody Riehl.

Brandon Snyder and Riehl assisted Eduardo Martinez, who scored goal number two.

Snyder, back for more action, shot over Cal's goal keeper on a free kick from 30 yards out for SJSU's third goal.

"We're contenders now," said Chad Harper, who was assisted by Riehl and Smith for the fourth Spartan goal. "This is a big win. (Cal) is the ninth in the nation, and USC is always a big Bay Area team. We're at St. Mary's next week, and if we take that, that's three wins in a row."

The crowd and benches were particularly lively Tuesday, partially because it was hard to tell what the referees were looking at sometimes, St. Clair said.

"We get ahead four to nothing, and then (Cal) starts coming back. It's a very emotional game. It's not for the faint-hearted out here, I'll tell you."

The next men's soccer home game is scheduled for Oct. 18, when the Spartans will host the UNLV Rebels.

Savage named WAC player of the week

By Mike Traphagen
Spartan Daily Staff Writer

Stacie Savage was named the Western Athletic Conference Pacific Division Player of the Week after her four goal performance Sunday against the University of Wyoming in the 1996 Cowgirl Soccer Classic held this past weekend.

Savage said she was proud of the award, but she honestly couldn't take all of the credit.

"I've always been overlooked, so for someone to acknowledge what I've done feels great," Savage said. "But the last goal wasn't mine."

According to the tournament scorecard, Mia Duran was credited with an assist on Savage's fourth goal, but Spartan Coach Philippe Blin said she should have received credit for the goal.

Savage

Savage

"Mia curved the ball in on a corner kick," Blin said. "Stacie went up to head the ball in, but she missed. The ball went in on its own, but the people in Wyoming thought she headed it in."

Blin added that this technicality should take nothing away from Savage's performance Sunday.

"She scored three goals in the game against Sacramento State also, so this should be the second time she's won the player of the week," Blin said.

Savage is a transfer student from De Anza College, where in two years she tallied 42 goals and 16 assists.

"When I was coaching at Santa Clara, we recruited her because we she's a real goal scorer," Blin said. "You should have seen the third goal she made on Sunday, it was a master bullet."

"It was a free kick from 25 yards away, and she kicked the ball so hard that the goalie had to fall backwards into the net to try to get it. The people in Wyoming were saying, 'Oh my God...'"

LOS ANGELES (AP) — With a little luck and some help from the San Francisco Giants, the Los Angeles Dodgers took another step toward the NL West title.

Ramon Martinez overcame a shaky start and control problems to win his seventh straight decision and Eric Karros had three hits as the Dodgers beat the Giants 6-2 Tuesday night, their 23rd win in 31 games.

The Dodgers began the day with a half-game lead over second-place San Diego, which played Colorado on Tuesday night. Los Angeles has five games remaining: two against the Giants and three against the Padres.

Leading 3-2, the Dodgers scored three runs in a weird sixth inning. After Allen Watson (8-11) walked Mike Piazza, Karros hit a sharp grounder up the middle for an apparent single. But the ball hit second base umpire Paul Runge and rolled into short left field, and Karros legged it into a double.

Raul Mondesi struck out, but the pitch was in the dirt and bounced away from catcher Rick Wilkins, allowing Mondesi to reach and loading the bases.

Tim Wallach followed with a fly ball into short left-center that dropped between left fielder Barry Bonds and center fielder Marvin Benard for an RBI single. It appeared either player could have made the catch.

Pinch-hitter Billy Ashley's infield hit made it 5-2, and Mondesi scored as Greg Gagne grounded out.

Martinez (15-6), who hasn't lost since Aug. 7, allowed just two hits in seven innings while walking six and striking out six. Two of the walks came in the first, when he needed 32 pitches to retire the side. He went to full counts on his first five batters.

Karros hit an RBI single in the bottom of the first, and the Dodgers made it 3-0 in the second on a run-scoring double by Gagne and a throwing error by shortstop Wilson Delgado, playing in his first big-league game.

The Giants scored twice in the fifth on a one-out single by Desi Wilson — the first San Francisco hit — a hit batter, an RBI single by Watson and a fielder's choice grounder by Benard.

Martinez then walked Bill Mueller and Bonds with two outs, loading the bases. But Glenallen Hill flied out to right.

President Robert Caret spoke to San Jose City Council members Tuesday afternoon at city hall regarding academic reform at SJSU.

study may be changed, he said.

Mayor Susan Hammer asked about utilizing private sector funding or support to help maintain critical programs.

Caret agreed that local businesses will have to start supporting the programs that provide their employees, like the aviation department.

"One of the things they have to do is help overcome the obstacles we can't overcome ourselves," Caret said. "If a program is so important to industry at this point, industry needs to do more than act as cheerleaders in the background."

Hammer also suggested that maybe the entire California State University system needed to look at consolidating programs. "It may be that we can't afford to have an art department at every campus," Caret said the CSU system is working on consolidating some programs through technological advancement.

"Up to now we've had very little concern with program duplication," Caret said. He added that currently SJSU offers a Masters in Library Science program that is beamed to CSU-Fullerton via satellite television.

After his presentation, Caret said even if programs have to be eliminated to save money, they will not just disappear.

"If something is trimmed it will be phased out so no one will be hurt by it. There are lots of ways to make the change happen. But we need funding to enhance the budgets. Eighty percent of the budget is on the academic side. That's where we need to look for the greatest savings."

Man shot after taking hostages in dorm

GREELEY, Colo. (AP) — A man who police hoped to question in the murder of three people was fatally shot Tuesday after taking his ex-girlfriend hostage in a University of Northern Colorado dormitory.

Carefully edited TV footage, broadcast widely in Colorado, showed the gunman sticking his head and shoulder outside the dorm window. The video then cuts away as the sounds of first one gunshot, then several more, are heard. He fell mortally wounded back into the room.

Police had negotiated with the man for hours after he shot his 18-year-old ex-girlfriend in the foot, said university spokesman Tom Barbour. Another female hostage was unharmed.

"Greeley police are confident that one of their shots is the one that killed him," Barbour said.

Police released no details on the three murders, which happened less than 24 hours prior to the college shooting in Bayfield, about 350 miles south of the campus. The ex-girlfriend, Heidi Hocker, lived in Ignacio, about five miles from Bayfield.

Elizabeth Rieboldt, a roommate of Hocker's who escaped by climbing out a window, said the gunman came to the dorm earlier Tuesday and returned when he knew her roommate would be there. She said he never threatened to shoot anyone, but he showed them a gun and would not allow anybody to leave the room.

"He told us that he had lost it and was going crazy," said Rieboldt, who escaped along with another woman when the gunman was in a hallway.

Police said the gunman refused to let doctors into the room to treat the injured woman and asked for pain pills and a six-pack of diet soda.

"He just wanted to talk to her," Rieboldt said. "He was very depressed and upset about something."
